Space Exploration

Space exploration uses telescopes, robotic spacecraft, landers, and crewed missions to study objects beyond Earth. Scientists investigate planets, moons, stars, and galaxies to understand how the universe formed and changes.

Robotic missions can travel to distant worlds without carrying astronauts. They collect images, measurements, and samples or analyze local soil and atmosphere. Their findings help researchers plan future missions and test scientific ideas.